Will people never learn that "a cold" is an accident to be dreaded and that when it occurs, treatment should be promptly applied? There is no knowing where the trouble will end, and while complete recovery is the rule, the exceptions are terribly frequent and thousands upon thousands of fatal illnesses occur every year, ushered in by a hitle injudiclous exposure and seemingly triling symptoms. Beyond this there are to-day countless invalids who can trace their complaints to "colds," which at the time of occurrence gave no concern and were therefore neglected. When troubled with a cold use Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is prompt and effectual.—Cincinnati Gazette.

BILL NYE, HUMORIST.

Career of the Greatest American Funmaker.

STRUGGLES IN EARLY LIFE.

His Work For the Press and on the Platform.

Distinctive Feature of His Humor-The Ludicrous Caricatures of McDougall. Services For the American Press Ass ciation-His Natural Modesty-A False Accusation-His Family.

The loss of Bill Nye, the man who for years made a great nation laugh, will be felt in millions of homes. To nine out of ten men the news of his death brought a sense of personal loss. He had made them smile when they had been despondent. Who could be ungrateful for such a service? It is of little use to speculate on the extent of Nye's fame. He was known wherever the English language is spoken and in some places where it is not.

Bill Nye, the humorist, is rather an old shortly, he was the greatest funmaker that America has ever seen. But Edgar Wilson Nye, the man, was known to comparatively few. Those who formed their opinions of him from hearsay were mistaken often. There was a good deal of the real man about him. The public thought of him only as wearing the jester's cap and bells, and from experience with other geniuses were ready to believe him capable of all eral months in the law office of Jenkins & count, but I hated to borrow." omfortable personality. But there were very few eccentricities about Nye. He was a genial, whole souled, honest, democratic sort of a man, who only differed from others of his kind in that he could always see the humorous side of a thing and had a penchant for expressing his fun in a way that was irresistible to those with any to write about it he says about those sense of humor.

Most of Bill Nye's readers think they know very little about what his real life had been, but as a matter of fact they have read a sort of running history of all his goings and comings and of many of the incidents which relieved the monotony of existence for him. The adventures and happenings which he wrote about and which most people thought had their existence only in his imagination were based largely on facts. Of course he added a ant, yet about them he has written some quaint exaggeration in the telling, but the foundations of his funny tales were actual occurrences. Perhaps the very fact that he wrote with such frankness misled his

Take, for instance, the story that he once wrote for an interviewer who wanted some biographical facts about the great humorist. It began as follows:

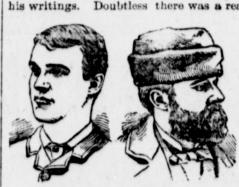

"Edgar Wilson Nye was born in Maine in 1850, Aug. 25, but at 2 years of age he took his parents by the hand, and telling them that Piscataquis county was no place for them he boldly struck out for St. Croix county, Wis., where the hardy young pioneer soon made for his parents a home.

There is just as much truth about this as you would expect if it had not been given a humorous turn. He was born in Maine, and his parents did remove to Wisconsin when he was 2 years old.

His description of the town where he the place as truly as if it had been a serious attempt. He says of it:

"My birthplace consisted of a small hamlet called Shirley, Me., now a station on the Bangor and Moosehead railroad, but at that time a happy and peaceful neighborhood clustering about a red sawmill in the midst of a rich belt of white birch and gum arabic trees. Few would have selected this as a birthplace perhaps, but I have never had cause to regret it."

The period that elapsed from the time Nye was old enough to remember until he left the paternal farm and struck out for himself he has said little about in any of son for this and probably a good one. Perhaps it was rather a hard sort of a life on the new Wisconsin farm, and without doubt Edgar Wilson had to take his share of the rough knocks and the hard work. Perhaps he cherished a feeling that his lot might have been lightened a little, but if he did he never expressed it. He has been frank enough about the other periods in his life when his prospects were even gloomier than when he was on the farm. These conditions were of his own making, however, and when he wrote of them he hurt no one's feelings but his own. He has told how he studied law and ! made a failure of it, and of his schoolteach-dreary books: as bright and fresh at the second reading as it did at the first. On the following day I could read it again, and it would seem just as new and mysterious as it did on the preceding days.'

His first experience as a newspaper writer in Laramie, Wy., whither he had drifted from Wisconsin, were far from pleasof his brightest articles. It was a long time before he discovered that he could write humorously. He believed it only after he had been told so thousands of times.

Nye had much time on his hands and wrote a weekly letter to the Cheyenne Sun, by John A. Cockerill, who was then manfor which he was paid at the rate of $1 a column. In one of his humorous autobiographical sketches Nye says that the sum received from his newspaper work amount- erward, "to get him to take up his abode ed to nearly $60 a year and so dwarfed his in New York and become a regular memreturns from his law practice that he de- ber of The World staff. He was afraid of cided to take up newspaper work and ap- the big city. He thought that his homely plied for a chance on the Laramie Sentinel. assistant, even if he was inexperienced, rural. I convinced him that the metropo and Nye was installed.

It was in The Sentinel that Nye's quaint humor first showed itself, and he was soon the smell of dog fennel, the hum of the editor in chief. "The salary was small, bee and the sweet income of the haymow but the latitude was great, and I was perwas born is accurate enough and paints mitted to write anything that I thought that there was a great deal of human na would please the people, whether it was news or not. By and by I had won every ture in the metropolis that he consented to heart by my patient poverty and my delightful parsimony with regard to facts. With a hectic imagination and an order on a restaurant which advertised in the paper I scarcely cared through the livelong day whether school kept or not."

When I first commenced humorous writing at Laramie," he once wrote, "the town was quite dead. It was also quite that are always about to be blessed. Somebody discovered a rich mine out there. A mushroom. The mine proved a failure; boom collapsed; everything fell flat; everybody who could get away left town. I had a weekly newspaper on my hands and had to stay. A queer lot of people staid with me. There were Mexicans, Indians, half breeds and cowboys. Very few newspaper anyway except for gun wadding. The only man in Laramie who had much to do was the coroner. He was behind his orders most of the time. The cemetery was about the only growing thing in town.

Outside of the exaggeration this is a faithful story of Nye's life in Laramie in the early days of the town. He became popular, however, with the mixed population. Nobody could help liking Nye. They made him a justice of the peace. There was no salary attached to the office, but an occasional fee helped out his meager stipend as a writer on The Sentinel. Even Nye, with all his bubbling humor, could write of that period always in a humorous vein. Here is an instance:

"It was really pathetic to see the poor little miserable booth where I sat and waited with numb fingers for business, for while I was called Judge Nye and frequently mentioned in the papers with great consideration I was out of coal half the time and once could not mail my letters for three weeks because I did not have the necessary postage. Of course I could have borrowed the money, but I had and still have a foolish horror of borrowing money. I did not mind running an ac-His appointment as postmaster followed.

and his letter of resignation to the post master general, in which he told that offi-Kent and Blackstone that were put at his cial that he would find the key under the mat outside the front door, is one of the most unique documents of the many that that he could never become a lawyer, as are treasured in Washington. Nye wrote a book about his experiences as editor of The Boomerang. He started the paper in Laramie and named it after a pet mule. "I could read the same passage today He got hardly enough out of it to keep that I read yesterday, and it would seem him from starving, but discerning exchange editors clipped out the witticisms with which the sheet bristled and spread his fame far and wide. Socn he began to get offers from editors of big papers in various cities, but he steadily refused to give up The Boomerang. At last there came one from the New York World. The editor offered him $150 a week.

This seemed to Nye like an offer for him to go into a mint and help himself. One hundred and fifty dollars a week! Why, he had hardly had that much money all at one time in his life. Still be hesitated. He had not confidence in himself and might have refused had not he been persuaded aging editor of The World.

'I had to use a great deal of persuasion," said Cockerill in speaking of it afthumor would not be appreciated here, and The editor of this paper was glad to get an that he would lose his touch with things lis was made up of country born men, and that our active, potential citizens loved on wet days. It was only when satisfied > come at all, and even then he pitched his tent down on Staten Island, where he could romp with his children and keep a cow."

Nye gradually gained confidence in himself, but he never grew to like the city. Even after he had been for years on the lecture platform and had visited almost every city and town in the land he had his home in the country, where he could wear deadly. Laramie was one of those towns old clothes when he chose to, and where there were neighbors who were glad to body discovered a rich mine out there. A know him and chat with him. His set-city of 2,000 inhabitants sprang up like a tling on a farm near Asheville, N. C., was supply of material for his regular articles of them could read and had no use for a and for his lectures. He made a serious attempt to make farming pay, too, in the regular way, but it was a failure. At each failure, however, he laughed, and the world laughed with him.

> about Nye's humor. He seldom made fun smith at the expense of any one else. He himself was the butt of most of his jokes. The fact that he never protested against the ludicrous caricatures which McDougall made of him to illustrate his own articles proves that he had not the least spark of vanity in his make up. Nye never cared much about his personal appearance. He wore clothes simply to cover him, he said, and it was true. On the lecture platform he sometimes presented a ludicrous appearance in his ill fitting attire, but he never appeared to realize it. It is said that Mrs. Nye used to protest sometimes against the McDougall pictures, but she could never get her husband to have them changed. He regarded them as a sort of
